Marc Jacobs's pink fantasy world closes New York Fashion Week

Marc Jacobs's pink fantasy world ends New York Fashion Week in style

According to set designer Stefan Beckman, who has worked with Jacobs for ten years, scale was a centerpiece of the designer's inspiration. "Marc loved the idea of a giant, oversize object, a house exaggerated by 30 percent. And utilizing pink against the military colors of his clothes," said Beckman. "We looked at the toy house in the Monopoly game, ranch houses, military houses for inspiration. Ultimately it became just the stylized idea of a house."

Marc Jacobs has recently collaborated with design studio PlayLab, Inc to open a Tote Bag pop-up installation in New York, sandwiched between two towering buildings in an eye-catching Lilac hue, mimicking popular AI generated artwork although real.

SPRING SUMMER READY-TO-WEAR

But the fashion crowd can always count on something big to happen at a Marc Jacobs show.

Welcome to the Marc Jacobs 2024 Dollhouse

Therrien's work was defined by concise sculptures of seemingly simple and mundane objects, and his singular style is associated with a sense of childlike wonder.

Therrien's sculpture was a perfect metaphor for the show's nostalgic grandeur built on the concept of the simple things that have sparked wonder, joy, imagination, and a sense of play in a designer's work. The models were essentially dolls, done up in exaggerated, '70s glamour accessories with big windswept curls in vibrant hair dye colors by Duffy and doses of yesterday's makeup by Diane Kendal. The clothes, shoes, and bags were fitted like paper doll clothes, ensuring they stood off the body, deliberately cartoonish, caught between the two-dimensional and three. At times the models' arms were frozen in a perfect doll pose.

Marc Jacobs surprises with paper doll-inspired 40th anniversary show

Models walked around this huge installation looking lilliputian and all the more doll-like for their makeup, which comprised multiple pairs of fake, doll-like eyelashes. They also wore large wigs which,
